I.9. Teaching approach

Focus on developing all resources, creating favorable conditions for the implementation of the teaching and learning process. These strategies and teaching methods help to achieve effective teaching goals.

A variety of teaching and learning activities are applied to help students not only acquire professional and social background knowledge, but also have the ability to use the knowledge to collaborate with others and develop their skills and their individual strengths. On that ground, personal skills such as communication, negotiation and teamwork skills are formed.

The strategies and teaching methods used in the programme are specifically as follows:

I.9.1. Direct Teaching Strategy

Direct teaching is a teaching strategy in which information is conveyed to the learners in a direct way, the teacher presents and the students listen. This teaching strategy is often applied in traditional classrooms and is effective when it comes to convey basic information to learners, explaining a new skill.

Teaching methods of this strategy include:

(1) Explicit teaching: This is a method of direct teaching strategy in which teachers guide and explain in details the contents related to the lesson, helping students to achieve the teaching goals of knowledge and skills.

(2) Lecture: The teacher presents and explains the contents of the lessons in lectures. Teachers are presenters and lecturers. Students only listen to lectures and sometimes take notes to absorb the knowledge that the teacher imparts.

(3) Guest Lecture: According to this method, students can participate in courses where the speakers and presenters are not teachers but people from businesses. Through the experience and knowledge of the lecturers, the lectures will help students form general or specific knowledge about the training major.

I.9.2. Indirect Teaching Strategy

Indirect teaching is a teaching strategy in which learners are facilitated in the learning process without any overt teaching by teachers. This is a learner-centered teaching process, in which the lecturer does not directly convey the lesson content to the students, but instead, the students are encouraged to participate actively in the learning process, using critical thinking skills to solve problems.

The teaching methods used in this strategy include: Inquiry, Problem Solving, and Case Study.

(4). Inquiry: In the teaching process, teachers use open questions or problems, and guide students to answer the questions step-by-step. Students can participate in group discussions to solve issues or problems together.

(5). Problem Solving: In the teaching and learning process, learners work on the problem posed and learn new knowledge through facing the problems. Through the process of finding solutions to the problems faced, students gain the knowledge and skills required by the subject.

(6) Case Study: This is a method towards a learner-centered approach to teaching, helping learners to develop critical thinking and communication skills. According to this method, teachers relate real-life situations, problems or challenges and ask students to solve them, helping students to form problem-solving skills, decision-making skills as well as researching skills.

I.9.3. Experience Learning Strategy

Experience learning is a teaching strategy in which learners acquire knowledge and skills through what they experience through practice, observation and perception. They learn through doing and experiencing.

Teaching methods of this approach include:

(7) Models: is a teaching method in which, students through observation and the process of building and designing the model required by teachers to achieve knowledge and skills needed.

(8). Field Trip: Through visits, internships, field trips at construction sites and companies to help students understand the actual working environment of the training industry after graduation, learn the technologies that are being used in the field of training, form professional skills and working culture in companies. This method not only helps students to form knowledge and skills but also creates career opportunities for students after graduation.

(9) Teaching Research Team: Students are encouraged to participate in projects, faculty's teaching and research groups to build research competence and creative skills. From there, creating a premise for students to continue their higher studies at the master's and doctoral levels after completing the Programme and graduating.

1.9.4. Interactive Teaching Strategy

This is a teaching and learning strategy in which teachers uses a combination of classroom activities such as posing problems or provoking questions and asking students to discuss and debate to solve the problems. Teachers play the role of guiding students to solve the problems step by step, thereby helping students achieve their learning goals. Students can learn from classmates or teachers to develop social skills, critical thinking skills, communication, negotiation and decision-making skills.

Techniques and methods applied in this approach include:

(10) Debates: is a teaching process in which teachers raises an issue related to the lesson, and students with opposing views on that issue must analyze, explain, and persuade the audience to support their point of view. Through this teaching activities, students develop skills such as critical thinking, negotiation, decision-making, or public speaking.

(11). Discussion: is a teaching method in which students are divided into groups and participate in discussing their views on certain issues posed by teachers. Unlike the debate method, in the discussion method, learners may share the same points of view, common goals and find additional ways to improve their views and solutions.

(12) Pear Learning: Students are organized into small groups to work together to solve problems posed and present their results through reports or presentations to other groups and lecturers.

1.9.5. Seft-study

Self-study strategies are understood as all learning activities of learners carried out by individual learners with little or no guidance from teachers. This is a process that helps students self-direct their learning according to their own learning experience, have the autonomy and control their learning through assignments, projects or issues that teachers instruct in classes.

This learning approach is applied mainly in form of homework (Work Assignment))

(13). Homework (Work Assignment): In this method, students are asked to work from home with the content and requirements set by teachers. By completing these homework assignments, students learn to self-study, as well as acquire the required content of knowledge and skills.

I.10. Assessment Strategy

Evaluation of student learning outcomes is the process of recording, storing and providing information about learners' progress throughout the teaching and learning process. The assessment of students' learning outcomes must ensure the principle of clarity, accuracy, objectivity and differentiation, regularity and periodicity. Specific requirements and assessment criteria are designed, published and clarified by the Law Department, for learners before studying.

Assessment information is provided and shared in a timely manner to relevant people including teachers, learners, parents and administrators to timely make adjustments to teaching and learning activities, ensuring orientation and achieving teaching goals.

The Law Department has developed and applied different assessment methods. Depending on the teaching strategies and methods and the requirements to meet the learning outputs of each course, the Department of Law chooses the appropriate assessment methods, ensuring sufficient information is provided to assess the progress of the learners as well as the effectiveness of the teaching process.

The assessment methods used in the learning programme of the Department of Law are divided into two main categories including On-going/Formative Assessment and Summative Assessment.

☐ On-going/Formative Assessment

The purpose of On-going/Formative Assessment is to provide timely feedback to teachers and learners on progress as well as things that need to be improved that appear in the teaching process.

Methods of On-going/Formative Assessment include

(1). Attendance Check

Apart from self-study time, the regular participation of students as well as the contributions of students in the classes also reflect their academic attitudes towards the courses they attend.

(2). Work Assignment

Learners are required to do some exercises to the lesson during or after class. These exercises can be done individually or in groups

(3). Oral Presentation

In some subjects of the Learning Programme of the Department of Law, students are required to work in groups to solve a problem, situation or content related to the lesson and present the results of their group in front of the whole class. This activity not only helps students gain specialized knowledge but also helps students develop skills such as communication, negotiation, and teamwork.

☐ Summative Assessment/Periodically Assessment

The purpose of this type of assessment is to make conclusions and ratings about the achievement of the goals and the quality of the outputs, the progress of the learners at the specified time in the learning process, including the end-of-course assessment, mid-semester assessments, and end-of-semester assessments.

Methods of assessment used in this type of assessment include:

(4). Writing Exam

According to this assessment method, students are asked to answer a number of questions, do exercises or give personal opinions on issues related to the learning outputs of the course and are assessed on the basis of pre-designed answers. The rating scale used in this assessment method is a scale of 10. The number of questions in the assessment is designed depending on the knowledge requirements of the course.

(5). Multiple choice exam

This assessment method is similar to the written method, students are asked to answer related questions based on pre-designed answers. The different point is that in this assessment method, students answer the required questions based on the answer suggestions also designed and printed in the exam papers.

(6). Oral Exam

In this method of assessment, students are being assessed through face-to-face interview.

(7). Writing Report

Students are assessed through their reports, including the content of the report, the presentation of content as well as the drawings/images used in the report.

(8). Oral Presentation

This assessment method is exactly the same as the presentation assessment among methods of process assessment. Assessment is conducted periodically (midterm, end of term, or end of course).

(9). PeerAssessment

Group work assessment is applied when implementing group learning activities and is used to assess students' teamwork skills.

I.11. Grading system

HUFLIT is using the grading system to assess students as follows:

10-point grading scale: are used to evaluate students of the course including component scores, final exam scores and course grades. The course grade is equal to the sum of the component scores multiplied by the respective ratios.

Alphabet grading scale is used to classify students' learning results based on course grades.
